The focus of the letter is on the press release and the media response rather than the study itself. We pointed out quite a few problems with the study, including the omissions of any kind of water other than blue water (meaning, the study ignores rainfall entirely) and the regulatory problems that allow meat production facilities to avoid supplying any useful data, but those are not harped upon in the response.

The authors of the response seem almost horrified that the study and its press release might imply to casual consumers of science and food news that a vegalmnose and could be more harmful to the environment than a meat-basede and.
